

Getting Closer View of Dedicated Hosting Service

Written by TechCore

Sunday, 19 February 2012 00:59

---

Accordingly, other names for dedicated hosting service are dedicated server and managed hosting server, but they are actually one type of internet hosting where you can lease the overall server without sharing with other clients. It is claimed that this dedicated hosting server gives more flexibility than shared hosting.

With this type of server, you will be able to have full control over the servers such as the options of operating system, hardware, and more essential things. Moreover, the hosting company may as well provide server administration as an add-on service.

There are some basic supports will be provided for your operating system or applications that include the support for some commercial operating system such as Microsoft Windows Server that is supplied through a particular program called Microsoft SPLA.

The Linux operating system is accompanied with Red Hat Enterprise which is made available to hosting providers on monthly fee basis. This option makes use an app called yum. Other than these two operating systems, there are also supports for those come from open source community without cost at all. These OS include Fedora, CentOS, Debian, and more.

Additionally, other important aspects in the discussion of dedicated hosting service include the bandwidth and connectivity. In details, bandwidth addresses to the data transfer rate transmitted from one point to another is particular given time period. There are some methods used to measure bandwidth such as 9th Method, Unmetered method, Total Transfer Method, and Bandwidth Pooling.

More vital points can help your understanding about dedicated hosting service include server management that provides a number of useful services, security to take care of obtrusive invaders, hackers, spammers, and more serious problems like worms, Trojan, and crashers.

Software packages also come along together with the services and they are available based on the kind of service you choose. Many software vendors realize that bundling their software with dedicated hosting services gives them significant market opportunity. Still, there are some limitations applied like the provision of IRC, ilegal content, and copyright violation.